The School of Commerce was established at New Malden, Surrey, April, 1870, for practically initiating boys into the routine of the counting house and general mercantile transactions, also to prepare them for professional pursuits, and is conducted and all its arrangements are made to attain these ends. The pupils receive a sound English education with a thorough knowledge of the French and German Languages, grammatically and conversationally; the system of teaching pursued, is based on many years experience in education and a long acquaintance with the requirements of the office—and the subjects are taught with a thoroughness which ensures their practical application.

Holm-Elms is well situated in a most healthy locality to the South of Wimbledon Hill, on the London, Tooting, and Kingston high road, of easy access to London, being ten minutes from the Wimbledon Station on the L. & S. W. Railway, and three minutes from the Lower Merton Station on the L. B. & S. C. Railway. The house stands in its own grounds and is very commodious; the dining room and dormitories are large and airy; the school-room (which with class rooms and offices are detached from the house) is fifteen feet in height and well ventilated, contiguous to which, is a large play ground.

The general welfare and comfort of the pupils—their moral and religious culture, health, deportment and progress receive the continuous, watchful attention and care of the principals. A liberal table is supplied, and each boy is provided with a separate bed. The dormitories are under the daily personal supervision of Mrs. J. C. Arlidge; and all the domestic arrangements are made with the view to render the Establishment as much as possible a well conducted home with all its comforts.
